

APR 25 1961

Approved For Release 2000/04/13 : CIA-RDP70-00058R0

"THE OTHER MR. DULLES"

Norman Ross

WMAQ, April 25, 1961

STATINTL

Pres. Kennedy yesterday appointed his brother, Admiral Burke and Allen W. Dulles, head of the CIA, to investigate our entire intelligence setup in an attempt to prevent further disastrous miscalculations like those that have given our enemies around the world such a resounding victory over the Cuban fiasco.

Kennedy we know from the McClellan committee hearings, Admiral Burke from World War II. But what kind of a man is Mr. Dulles? Knowing that he carries in his mind more cold war secrets than any man alive, a Washington lady is said to have been disappointed when she first saw him in person. "Why he looks just like Teddy Roosevelt, only his teeth are straight!" she said.

The son of a Presbyterian minister, and brother of John Foster Dulles, his outstanding characteristic, according to a Princeton classmate, is "an enormous patience."

Though active in sports and social activities in college he won a Phi Beta key, then set out for India to teach. The pay was too low in the Foreign Service which he next entered, so he joined his brother in law.

But in World War II, as chief of the OSS in Europe's prime listening post in Switzerland; he led a life that could be chronicled in a paperback thriller. Getting wind of the German V-2 rockets, he provided the information that sent bombers to destroy the V-2 base. He handled 2600 stolen German documents, received word about that butler in the British embassy in Germany whose spying activities were told in the movie "Five Fingers" and the book "Operation Cicero." In incredibly delicate operations, he arranged